Do you wonder if you or your child may have ADHD

The symptoms of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) also commonly referred to as ADD include but are not limited to inattention and/or hyperactivity and impulsivity. Children with ADD may have difficulty staying on task, whether it's listening to a teacher, completing homework or finishing a chore. Although children will display some of these at some point or another, the level of impairment differentiates typical behaviors from a clinical level. Frequently ADD is mistaken for laziness. Often the true problem is unrecognized throughout childhood.

Life can be a balancing act for any adult, if you find yourself constantly late, disorganized, forgetful, and overwhelmed by your responsibilities, you may have ADD. Up to half the Adults diagnosed with ADD had it as children. In childhood, some were able to compensate for the symptoms of ADD, only to run into problems as responsibilities increase in adulthood.

When ADHD persists into adulthood, symptoms may vary. For instance, an adult may experience restlessness instead of hyperactivity. In addition, adults with ADHD often have problems with interpersonal relationships and employment. The demands on your abilities to organize, focus, and recall information can be challenging for anyone, but if you have ADD/ADHD, it can feel impossible.

- As many as 10,000,000 American adults live with ADD.
 - About 60% of children diagnosed with ADD experience these symptoms into adulthood.
 - Many people with the disorder don't receive an official diagnosis until middle age.
